You should have Two Homes

First, the home into the planning of which has gone so much whispered conspiring—so much wrinkling of brows—quoting of figures.

And then there is the other home—the home that broadens the whole horizon of your new life—your outdoor home—your car.

Perhaps, Miss June Bride, you have already thought of it. Or, again perhaps not. But there are only three things to consider about this other home. How much you want to spend. How much you can get for your money. How much service you can expect from and on the car you buy.

To help you in your choice we invite you to inspect our line of General Motors cars. Here is the Outstanding Chevrolet—the car you see everywhere—A Six in the price range of the Four—the most luxurious low-priced car in the world. Here is the New Oakland Six, Olympic Series—an amazingly fine six-cylinder car, roomy, comfortable, beautiful and in performance simply magnificent. You must have heard too of the Finer Oldsmobile—the car that has every conceivable quality of a fine car and is yet sold at an almost incredibly low price. Finally you should see the Viking, an absolutely new car by General Motors. It revolutionises every known standard of automobile value.

Or perhaps you want to do as so many others do. You want to begin with a really good Used Car. There are none better than Gorrie's famous O.K. Used Cars—with the O.K. that counts. And enhancing the worth of each and every one of these cars is A. D. Gorrie and Co.'s city-wide service—prompt, efficient and always available in whatever part of Toronto you may be.

See these cars before making your decision. Inspect them and you will be helped in your choice.

THE SONGS OF BALAAM

Our dear old friend Reuben Brainin has again trespassed on the sacred territory of our partizan Balaks, and now we hear the raucous voice of our Jewish Balaams shouting their hymns of hate against him.

Brainin is one of the foremost figures in Hebrew literature to-day. Very few men of his generation have done as much for the cause of Jewish nationalism and Hebrew literature as has this veteran litterateur. When Brainin first appeared on the literary scene the tendency among Jewish men of letters was to seek their salvation in alien cultures. The Haskalah (enlightenment) in Eastern Europe apotheosized the richness and magnificence of European culture. Hebrew literature was regarded as a corridor through which the restless energy of the Jewish genius was to effect its escape into the wide realm of world literature. Brainin was one of the first to envisage the possibilities of a revival of Hebrew culture, and he consecrated himself to the struggle for its promotion. Coupled with his faith in the vitality of the Hebrew language has his love for the Jewish people, and his faith in its creative potentialities. When modern Zionism was promulgated by Herzl, Brainin at once rushed to its support, and placed his great literary prestige at its command. If ever a man served his people and its culture and deserved well of it, it was Brainin in relation to the Jewish people. And now in the twilight hours of his career he, assuredly, is deserving of a meagre guerdon of honor from the people in whose battles his life had been spent.

Yes, but Brainin the lover of Hebrew culture is also an uncompromising lover of truth, and he will not flex his knees before the command of party authority. His fine spirit will recognize only the necessity of the larger principles that shape the destiny of Jewish life. Is it surprising that he revolts against the vulgarities and shams introduced by the cheap partizans who cover their ruthlessness with a pretence of realism?

Often during his career Brainin the ardent nationalist, and Hebrew revivalist, has found himself in opposition to the powers that were in the movements with which he was identified. His sweeping survey of Jewish values could not contract to the petty dimensions of misguided temporary considerations. Brainin is a Zionist—one of Herzl's first and staunchest supporters—but to him Zionism is the religion of the Jewish national spirit, and its services must be marked by an attitude of holiness and reverence. He cannot tolerate sham priests or tawdry dishonest ceremonies.

To Brainin Zionism is a movement concerned with the fundamental needs of the Jewish people. Its sanction and value are derived from its function in Jewish life. Now, the Jewish people and Jewish life, as the source, are of greater importance than Zionism the offshoot. Zionism is coextensive with Jewish life, but Jewish life is not coterminous with Zionism. Brainin, as a Jewish leader has therefore always maintained that it was his function to concern himself with all Jewish needs and problems, even those that lay beyond the border line of Zionism. On many occasions he was reviled and condemned by his Zionist associates for his broad view of the range of Jewish interests. But he always staunchly stuck to his guns. Whatever concerns Jews everywhere should concern the Jewish leader.

Well, at the present time there is the problem of the Jews in Russia demanding attention. It is not a Zionist problem. But it is a major Jewish question. And Brainin felt that its challenge should not be ignored. He interested himself in the fate of the millions of Jews in Russia, and during the past two or three years he pleaded their cause. He has spent some forty-five years in the service of Jewish nationalism and Hebrew literature. Latterly he dedicated some three years of the prime of his life to the plight of Russian Jewry.

And now we hear the hue and cry raised by the official Zionists. Brainin is helping Russian Jewry; he is therefore a traitor to Zionism. Brainin must be condemned. He is a renegade.

Brainin is at present in South Africa seeking support for the ameliorative endeavors in Russia. The South African Zionists just held a convention. Taking their cue from some of the cheap Zionist politicians in New York, and from a few Zionist morose in Canada, they decided to ignore Brainin—the veteran Zionist and Hebrew classic. Brainin appeared at the convention and sat down among the audience in the back of the hall. And the Zionist leaders, who the while despised him, the British officials (as we were) were embarrassed. They said to the crowd: Brainin is here, we want him at a Zionist gathering—Brainin had refused—he was demanding help for his hapless brothers in Russia.

Fifty years of service to the cause of Jewish nationalism, to the cause of Hebrew culture, a lifetime of devotion—and in the end what? And there comes before our eyes another spectacle. A Zionist conference in London. Max Nordau, the great Zionist prophet, the right-hand man, wandering round the streets of London, and the Jews would not invite him to come among them. He had no right to join them, they would not take him home, ignore him. Let us not speak of disappointment!

Brainin, Nordau, and his servants are all in the same boat.

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi HARRY J. STERN, of Montreal,
Associate Contributing Editor

Two Letters

The letters printed below reached me a few days ago. They indicate that the average non-Jew is today seeking to know Israel. What is Israel doing to inform the non-Jewish world of its heritage?

Dear Rabbi Stern:

I have read with much pleasure some of your addresses as published in the "Gazette" and it has encouraged me to write and ask you a very unusual request which may surprise you very much.

First of all to introduce myself. I do not know whether you know London at all, but our family were all educated at the Central Foundation Schools—my sisters at the girls school (Spital Square) and us boys at the Cowper Street Schools. At least 30% of the scholars were of the Jewish Faith and we Christians found that on the average they were far ahead of us mentally and undoubtedly you are. The very high mental standard of that school due to the Jewish boys there naturally spurred the others to greater efforts than would otherwise have been the case. Incidentally we made friendships that have stood for over twenty years. In my own case my only real friends of long standing are Jewish. Last week end I met the boat from England to greet one of them who has come to this country and this makes me do what I have long been going to do—find out a little more about the Jewish Faith for I am very ignorant. Hundreds of times I have been to supper at Jewish houses and have covered my head while the rabbis read prayers but have never really understood things. I want you to let me know of a book which will give me a rough idea of modern thought in your Church. I know in a vague way that you have "Orthodox" people and that you have had a "reformation". I know also that you believe in the Brotherhood of man which is a great step towards all religions.

I hope you will understand me. I am not one of those who approve of the "Jews" all of Jews and I am an old member of the Church of England, but I do feel I ought to know more of your faith. I realize what humanity owes to the Jewish faith and know from personal experience that you are the most charitable people on earth.

My curiosity has been stimulated quite a little also by the fact that in this Province among people of a certain Church they hold extraordinary views about you and I have had occasion to correct them.

If you would like to be sure of my bona fides before putting me on to the information, I would like to have, I can put you into communication with a Jewish gentleman in London who will vouch for my good intentions, in case I have not made them sufficiently clear in this letter to you I am sure will surprise you a little coming from a complete stranger.

With very kind regards,

Yours faithfully

J. N. H.

Dear Rabbi Stern:

On several occasions I have attended the Friday evening services held at Temple Emmannu-El.

May I express to you my thanks for so great a privilege.

I have delighted in the reading of the beautiful Hebrew prayers, and in fact, the whole service has been a source of pleasure and profit to me.

It has been a wonderful opportunity for me to "seek fellowship with Israel", and I have learnt much. Again I offer my thanks.

Yours very truly,

E. S.

Confirmation

In all Reform Synagogues is observed the confirmation service on the Feast of Shabuoth. So sacred and beautiful an institution has the confirmation become that many conservative congregations are slowly instituting it. Time does make tremendous changes. The Bar Mitzvah for the boy only does not satisfy. After all, we are living in an ultra-modern world. Woman has found her place. She is active in congregational life. She must be prepared for the religious activities. The confirmation tends to give the girl equal standing to the boy in Synagogal matters. Hence the tremendous appeal of the confirmation to the modern Jew.

However, one does regret that many Temples arrange their confirmations to take place on Sundays—even though Shabuoth does not occur on Sunday. After all, confirmation on Shabuoth does have an appeal. It is the traditional feast upon which Israel pledged to keep and uphold the Torah. Why then ignore the Shabuoth Day? I know full well that the most convenient day is Sunday. "They" can all come and crowd the Temples on Sundays. But why not ask the members of congregations to come to Temple on Shabuoth even though it entails a sacrifice? Judaism is not a matter of convenience. Rather is it a matter of conscience. Is it true that the element of sacrifice in behalf of Judaism is lacking in the modern Jew?

Bar-Mitzvahs

Rudolph Kanigsberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Kanigsberg, Hutchison Street, was bar-mitzvah, Saturday, June 1, at Young Israel Synagogue. Mr. and Mrs. Kanigsberg gave a dinner Saturday night attended by Mr. and Mrs. L. Berman, Mr. and Mrs. M. Godlovitch, Mrs. J. L. Zlotnik, Mrs. M. German, of Three Rivers, and Rabbi M. Simon, J. C. Zacks, Rabinovitch J. Krammer, J. Caplin, M. Zlotnik, L. Schmukler, A. Schacter, Moe Kanigsberg. Sunday night, June 2, the following guests were received: Mr. and Mrs. A. Cooper, Mr. and Mrs. I. Gelfond, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Zacks, Mrs. I. B. Fainer, Mrs. L. Hertzog, Mr. and Mrs. A. Brach, Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Park, Mr. and Mrs. M. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Rabin, Mr. and Mrs.

The Rise of David Levinsky

A Novel by Abraham Cahan

By arrangement with HARPER and BROTHERS, Copyright.

I often thought of Mr. Even, but nothing was further from my mind than to let him see me in my present plight. One morning I met him, face to face, on the Bowery, but he evidently failed to recognize me.

One afternoon I called on Argentine Rachel. "Look here, Rachel," I said, in a studiously matter-of-fact voice, "I'm dead broke to-day. I'll pay you in a day or two."

Her face fell. "I never trust. Never," she said, shaking her head mournfully. "It brings bad luck, anyhow."

I felt like sinking into the ground. "All right, I'll see you some other time," I said, with an air of bravado.

She ran after me. "Wait a moment. What's your hurry?"

By way of warding off "bad luck," she offered to lend me three dollars in cash, out of which I could pay her. I declined her offer. She pleaded and expostulated. But I stood firm, and I came away in a state of the blackest wretchedness and self-disgust.

I could never again bring myself to show my face at her house.

A little music-store was now my chief resort. It was kept by a man whom I had met at the synagogue of the Sons of Antonin, a former cantor who now supplemented his income from the store by doing occasional services as a wedding bard. The man, a Russian, and a man-beatnik who made the store their headquarters had begun to take an interest in me, but the dance and melody I was now ceasingly "borrowing" of them had turned me into an outcast in their eyes. I felt it keenly. I would sulk around the store, anxious to leave, and loitering in spite of myself. There was a piano in the store, upon which they often played. This, their talks of music, and their venomous gossip had an irresistible fascination for me.

I noticed that morbid vanity was a common disease among them. Some of them would frankly and boldly sing their own panegyrics, while others, more discreet and tactful, let their high opinions of themselves be inferred. Nor could they conceal the grudges they bore one another, the jealousies with which they were eaten up. I thought them ludicrous, repugnant, and yet they lured me. I felt that some of those among them who were most grotesque and revolting in their selfishness had something in their make-up—certain interests, passions, emotions, visions—which placed them above the common herd. This was especially true of a spare, big-eyed-looking violinist, boyish of figure and cat-like of manner, with deep dark rings under his insatiable blue eyes. He called himself Octavian. He was literally consumed by the blaze of his own conceit and envy. When he was out in raptures over the poetry, nobility, or depth of his own playing or compositions, he would give way to paroxysms of malice and derision at the expense of some other musician, from his East Side rivals all the way up to Saragat, who was then at the height of his career and had recently played in New York. Wagner was his god, yet no sooner would somebody else express admiration for Wagner music than he would offer to show that all the good things in the works of the famous German were merely so many paraphrased plagiarisms from the compositions of other men. He possessed a phenomenal memory. He seemed to remember every note in every opera, symphony, oratorio, or concerto that anybody ever mentioned, and there was not a piece of music by a celebrated man but he was ready to "prove" that it had been stolen from some other celebrated man.

His invective was particularly violent when he spoke of those Jewish immigrants in the musical profession whose success had extended beyond the East Side. He could never mention without a jeer or some coarse epithet the name of a Madison Street boy, a violinist who was then attracting attention in Europe and who was booked for a series of concerts before the best audiences in the United States.

He was a passionate phrase-maker. Indeed, it would have been difficult to determine which afforded him more pleasure—his self-laudations or the colorful, pungent, often preposterous language in which they were clothed.

"I am writing something with hot tears in it," I once heard him brag. "They'll be so hot they'll scald the heart of every one who hears it, provided he has a heart."

He had given me some rich-lips, but his boasts would fill me with disgust. On the occasion just mentioned I was so irritated with my poverty and with the whole world that I was seized with an irresistible desire to taunt him. As he continued to rub his forthcoming masterpiece I threw out a Hebrew quotation:

"Let others praise thee, but not thine own mouth."

He took no heed of my thrust. But since then he never looked at me and I never dared ask him for a nickel again.

He had a ferocious temper. When it broke loose it would be a veritable volcano of revolting acrimony, his thin lips opening and snapping shut in peculiar fashion, as though he were squirting venom all over the floor. He was as sensual as Maximilian Max, on his voluptuous talks of women was far more offensive in form. But the

MY TEMPLE
CHAPTER I

One Friday evening in September
I stood on Grand Street with my eyes fixed to the big open windows of a store-hall on the second floor of a brick building on the opposite side of the lively thoroughfare. Only the bustle of the dancers could be seen. This at the distance that divided me from the hall enveloped the scene in mystery. As the couples floated by, as though borne along on waves of the music, the girls clinging to the men, their fantastic figures held me spellbound. Several other people were watching the dancers from the street, mostly women, who gazed at the appearing and disappearing images with envious eyes.

Presently I was accosted by a dandified-looking young man who rushed at me with an exuberant, "How are you?" in English. He was dressed in the height of the summer fashion.
He looked familiar to me, but I was at a loss to locate him.

"Don't you know me? Try to remember!"

It was Gitelson, my fellow-passenger on board the ship that had brought me to America, the tailor who clung to my side when I made my entry into the New World, sixteen months before.

The change took my breath away.
"You didn't recognize me, did you?"

he said, with a triumphant snicker, pulling out his cuffs so as to flaunt their gold or gilded buttons.

He asked me what I was doing, but he was more interested in telling me about himself. That cloak contractor who picked him up near Castil-liarden had turned out to be a skin-flint and a slave-driver. He had started him on five dollars a week for work the market price of which was twenty or thirty. So Gitelson left him as soon as he realized his real worth, and he had been making good wages ever since. Being an excellent tailor, he was much sought after, and although the trade had two long slack seasons he always had plenty to do. He told me that he was going to that dance hall across the street, which greatly enhanced his importance in my eyes and seemed to give reality to the floating phantoms that I had been watching in those windows. He said he was in a hurry to go up there, as he had "an appointment with a lady" (this in English), yet he went on describing the picnics, balls, excursions he attended.

Thereupon I involuntarily shot a look at his jaunty straw hat, thinking of his gray forehead. I did so several times. I could not help it. Finally my furtive glances attracted his attention.

"What are you looking at? Anything wrong with my hat?" he asked, baring his head. His hair was freshly trimmed and dandily dressed. As I looked at the patch of silver hair that shone in front of a glossy expanse of brown he exclaimed, with a laugh: "Oh, you mean that! That's nothing. The ladies like me all the same."

He went on boasting, but he did it in an inoffensive way. He simply could not get over the magic transformation that had come over him. While in his native place his income had amounted to four rubles (about two dollars) a week, his wages here were now from thirty to forty dollars. He felt like a peasant suddenly turned to a prince.
But he spoke of his successes in a petulant, soft voice and with a kindly, non-fading smile that won my heart. Altogether he made the impression of an exceeding unassuming, good-natured fellow, without anything like ginger in his make-up.

After he had dragged his fill he invited me to have a glass of soda with him. There was a soda-stand on the next corner, and when we reached it I paused, but he pulled me away.

"Come on!" he said, disdainfully.
"Well, go into a drug-store or better still, let's go to an ice-cream parlor."

This I hesitated to do because of my shabby clothes. When he noticed the cause of my embarrassment he was pleased.

"Come on!" he said, with warm sympathy, uttering the two words in English. "When I say 'Come on' I know what I am talking about."

"But your lady is waiting for you!"
"We can wait. Ladies are never on time, anyhow."

"But maybe she is."

"If she is she can dance with some of the other fellows. I wouldn't be vicious. There are plenty of other ladies. I should not take lady ladies ator, could make as much as seventy-five dollars a week, working about fifteen hours a day. However, during the first two or three weeks I was too much borne down by the cruelty of my drudgery to be interested in the luring rewards which it held out. Not being accustomed to physical exertion of any kind, I felt like an innocent man suddenly thrown into prison and put at hard labor. I was shocked, I was crushed. I was continually looking at the clock, counting the minutes, and when I came home I would feel so sore in body and spirit that I could not sleep. Studying or reading was out of the question.

Moreover, as a peddler I seemed to have belonged to the world of business, to the same class as the rich, the refined, while now, behold! I was a workman, a laborer, one of the masses. I pitied myself for a degraded wretch. And when some of my shopmates indulged in coarse pleasantries in the hearing of the finisher girls it would hurt me personally, as a confirmation of my disgrace. "And this is the kind of people with whom I am doomed to associate!" I would lament. In point of fact, there were only four or five fellows of this kind in a shop of fifty. Nor were some of the peddlers or music teachers I had known more modest of speech than the worst of these clock-makers. What was more, I felt that some of my fellow-employees were purer and better men than I. But that did not matter. I abhorred the shop and everybody in it as a well-bred, convict abhors his jail and his fellow-inmates.

When the men quarreled they would call one another, among other things, "bundle eaters." This meant that they reckoned one another of being ever hungry for bundles of raw material, ever eager to "piddle up all the work in the shop." I wondered how one could be anxious for physical toil. They seemed to be a lot of savages.

The idea of leaving the shop often crossed my mind, but I never had the courage to take it seriously. I had tried my hand at peddling and failed. Was I a failure as a mechanic as well? Was I unfit for anything? The other fellow at the shop had a definite foothold in life, while I was a wall, a miser the well-nearly two years in America with nothing to show for it. Thoughts such as these had a cowering effect on me. They made me feel somewhat like the fresh prisoner who has been put to work at stone-breaking to have his wild spirit broken. I dared not give up my new occupation. I would force myself to work hard, and as I did so the very terrors of my toil would fascinate me, giving me a sense of my own worth. A. The jackets that bore my stitches kept taking up the concrete recall of my useful performance would become a source of moral satisfaction to me. And when I received my first wages the first money I had ever earned by the work of my hands, it seemed as if it were the first money I had ever earned honestly.

By little and little I got used to my work and even to enjoy it. pro creases. Moreover, the thinking and the dreaming I usually indulged in while plying my machine became a great pleasure to me. It seemed as though one's mind could not produce such interesting thoughts or images unless it had the rhythmic aid of a sewing machine to stimulate it.

I now ate well and slept well. I was in the best of health and in the best of spirits. I was in an uplifted state of mind. No one seemed to be miserable who did not earn his bread in the sweat of his brow. I did find I then changed. I no longer heard a Socialist speech. I might have become an ardent follower of Karl Marx and my life might have been directed along lines other than those which brought me to financial power.

The girls in the shop, individually extremely interested in me, but their collective presence was something of which I never seemed to be quite aware. It was as though the workaday atmosphere were scented with the breath of a delicate perfume—a perfume that was tainted with the tang of the young. ing for Matilda.

Two girls who were seated adjacent to me from my machine were suddenly manifesting secrets. One up and then the other would rise around to make sure that the contractor was not watching, and then he would bend over and whisper something into her ear, and then she would get up and do the same thing. This would go on for about half an hour. I was surprised to find that these girls were manifesting such behavior. I was surprised to find that these girls were manifesting such behavior.

less as their work, earnings, lodgings, or dresses. Nevertheless, it seemed to me that their whisper, especially when accompanied by a smile, a frown, or a wink, conveyed some of their intimate thoughts of men. They were homely girls, with pinched faces yet of such moments they represented to me all that there was of coloring and disquieting in womanhood.

bat, or the price of a ticket to a ball, picnic, or dancing-class. The result was that while she was pinching and scrimping herself to pave the way to her marriage she barred herself, by this very process, from contact with possible suitors. She was a good soul. From time to time she would give some of her money to a needy relative, and then she would try to make up for it by saving with more order than ever. Her name was Gussie.

Joe, the plump, dark fellow who was teaching me the trade, was one of the several men in the shop who were addicted to salacious banter. One of his favorite pranks was to burlesque some synagogue chant from the solemn service of the Days of Awe, with disgustingly coarse Yiddish in place of the Hebrew of the prayer. But he was not a bad fellow, by any means. He was good-natured, extremely impressionable, and susceptible of good influences. A sad tune would bring a woe-begone look into his face, while a good joke would make him laugh to tears. He was fond of referring to himself as my "rabbi," which is Hebrew for teacher, and that was the way I would address him, at first playfully, and then as a matter of course.

One day, after he had delivered himself of a quip that set my teeth on edge, I said to him, appealingly:

"Why should you be saying these things, rabbi?"

"If you don't like them you can stop your God-fearing ears," he fired back, good-naturedly.

I retorted that it was not a matter of piety, but of common decency, and my words were evidently striking home, but the girls applauded me, which spoiled it all.

"If you want to preach sermons, you're in the wrong place," he flared up. "This is no synagogue."

"Nor is it a pigsty," Gussie urged, without raising her eyes from her work.

A month or two later he abandoned these sallies of his own accord. The other fellows twitted him on his burst of "righteousness" and made efforts to lure him into a race of ribald punning, but he stood his ground.

By and by it leaked out that he was engaged and madly in love with his girl. I warned him.

The young woman who had won his heart was not an employee of our shop. Indeed, love-affairs between working-men and working-girls who are employed in the same place are not quite so common as one might suppose. The factory is scarcely a proper setting for romance. It is one of the battle-fields in our struggle for existence, where we treat woman as an inferior being, whereas in civilized love-making we prefer to keep up the chivalrous fiction that she is our superior. The girls of our shop, hard-worked, disheveled, and handled with sympathy, but it was not the kind of anything but chivalry, aroused my sympathy, but it was not the kind of feeling that stimulates romantic interest. Still, collectively, as an abstract reminder of their sex, they flavored my sordid environment with poetry.

CHAPTER III

The majority of the students at the College of the City of New York was already made up of Jewish boys, mostly from the tenement-houses. One such student often called at the cloak-shop in which I was employed, and in which his father—a tough looking fellow with a sandy beard, a former teamster—was one of the pressers. A classmate of this boy was supported by an aunt, a spinster who made good wages as a hench-maker in a cigar-factory. To make an educated man of her nephew was the great ambition of her life. All this made me feel as though I were bound to that college with the ties of kinship. Two of my other shopmates had sons at high school. The East Side was full of poor Jews—wage-earners, peddlers, grocers, salesmen, insurance agents—who would beggar themselves to give their children a liberal education. Then, too, thousands of our working-men attended public evening school, while many others took lessons at home. The Ghetto rang with a clamor for knowledge.

To save up some money and prepare for college seemed to be the most natural thing for me to do. I said to myself that I must begin to study for it without delay. But that was impossible, and it was quite some time before I took up the course which the presser's boy had laid out for me. During the first three months I literally had no time to open a book. Nor was that all. My work as a cloak-maker had become a passion with me, so much so that even on Saturdays, when the shop was closed, I would scarcely do any reading. Instead, I would seek the society of other cloak-makers with whom I might talk shop.

I was developing speed rather than skill at my sewing-machine, but the question of speed afforded exercise to my brain. It did not take me long to realize that the number of cloaks or jackets which one turned out in a given length of time was largely a matter of method and system. I perceived that Joe, who was accounted a fast hand, would take up the various parts of a garment in a certain order calculated to reduce to a minimum the amount of time lost in passing from section to section. So I watched him intently, studying his system with every fiber of my being. Nor did I content myself with imitating his processes. I was forever pondering the problem and introducing little improvements of my own. I was making a science of it. It was not merely physical exertion. It was a source of intellectual interest as well. I was wrapped up in it. It happened to meet a cloak-operator who was noted for extraordinary speed. I would feel like an ambitious musician meeting a famous virtuoso. Some cloak-operators were artists. I certainly was not one of them. I admired their work and envied them, but I lacked the artistic patience and the dexterity essential to workmanship of a high order. Much to my chagrin, I was a born bungler. But then I possessed physical strength, nervous vitality, method, and inventive ness—all the elements that go to make up speed.

I was progressing with unusual rapidity. Joe criticized my work severely, often calling me botcher, but I knew that this was chiefly intended to give his satisfaction at the growing profit that my work was yielding him.

I now earned about ten dollars a week, of which I spent about five, saving the rest for the next season of idleness.

At last that season set in. There was not a stroke of work in the shop. I was so absorbed in my new vocation that I would pass my evenings in a cloak-makers' haunt, a café on Delancey Street, where I never tired talking sleeves, pockets, stitches, trimming, and the like. There was a good deal of card-playing in the place, but somehow I never succumbed to that temptation.

Report in Statement by Bank of Montreal

New High Level Reached Shows Assets of $915,705,653—Coincident With Steady Expansion in Current Business in Canada a Strong Liquid Position Has Been Maintained—Liquid Assets Are Equivalent to Close to 60 Per Cent of Liabilities to Public.

In forwarding to its shareholders the half-yearly report to April 30th, the Bank of Montreal is able to present a particularly satisfactory statement. Every part of the report testifies to the expansion being enjoyed by the Bank. Total assets are the largest in its history; as a result of the recent stock issue, both capital and rest are at a new high level there is a steady gain in loans to Canadian trade and industry, but at the same time the Bank has found it possible to maintain its usual strong position by reporting total liquid assets of close to 60 per cent of all liabilities to the public.

Of special interest to shareholders is the indication that net profits have risen more rapidly than usual. This is undoubtedly due to the larger business handled, coupled with higher interest earned upon that portion of the Bank's reserves employed outside of Canada, and the increased funds made available by the recent stock issue. From the standpoint of the general public there will be a feeling of security in the position enjoyed by the Bank and its ability to play an active part in guiding general business policies throughout the Dominion.

Growth in Assets.

The statement of assets and liabilities shows that at April 30th total assets of the Bank made a new high record at $915,705,653, as compared with $868,187,616 at the corresponding date a year ago. Of this amount liquid assets are $491,554,032, at which level they are equivalent to 53.24 per cent of liabilities to the public, and are up from $452,864,416, included in them are cash holdings of $109,837,212, equal to 13.24 per cent of public liabilities. In liquid assets the principal change is in holdings of Dominion and Provincial Government securities, which are $101,603,501, as against $81,642,520.

Greater activity in business throughout Canada is reflected by an increase in current loans and discounts to $314,464,137 from $297,000,000, and loans to cities, towns and municipalities are $30,451,567, as compared with $25,076,930. At the same time there has been a reduction in loans elsewhere than in Canada and these are now reported at $46,226,243, down from $57,580,519. A further indication of the larger business is afforded by the increase in notes of the bank in circulation to $42,395,502 from $42,644,638.

Total deposits are reported at $771,015,032, as compared with $746,000,000. Of this amount deposits not bearing interest amount to $158,000,000, and deposits bearing interest stand at $613,015,032. There is a gain in the former, while the somewhat smaller volume of deposits bearing interest is doubtless due to withdrawals of large special accounts which are usually treated as being of temporary character. Balances due to banks and banking correspondents elsewhere than in Canada are reported at $15,597,167.

Bank premises are shown at a higher level and now stand at $14,000,000, against $11,550,000. The change is due to transfer from the former realty holding company, and, as announced by the president in his annual address in December last, all realties now appear under this one heading.

Gain in Profits

The profits and loss account, in addition to the larger profits reported, also shows the manner in which the premiums on the new stock issue have been taken care of. Profits for the half-year to April 30th were $3,491,651, as compared with $2,994,901 in the corresponding period of the previous year. To the profits were added balance carried forward of $713,788 and the premiums on the new stock of $4,632,060. This brought the total amount available for distribution up to $8,837,500, which was appropriated as follows: dividends $1,869,530; amount credited to Rest Account $4,632,060, being the entire premium on the new stock issue; provision for taxes Dominion Government $207,840; reservation for bank premises $600,000; leaving a balance to be carried forward of $1,528,069, as against $755,114.

As a result of the recent stock issue, capital now stands at $34,548,760, up from $29,916,700 while the Rest Account is a million dollars higher than capital, at $35,548,760.

The firm of D. Hatton Company is an old established one, dating from 1874. The founder of the house, Daniel Hatton, started the business at the present stand fifty-four years ago, and, being a man of ability and vision, achieved a great success in a pioneering way. In 1910 the business was transferred to J. A. Paulhus, a partner in the old firm, and since the business has grown by leaps and bounds. The firm has a universal reputation and is well known all over this continent and abroad. Besides controlling a vast amount of trade in all parts of the country, it also exports to Europe, West India and Mediterranean countries. The business embraces all kinds of fish, whether live, fresh, salted, smoked, canned and preserved. The D. Hatton Company claim to be the largest distributors of all kinds of fish in Canada. Monsieur J. A. Paulhus, the present owner, has devoted much of his time to the study of fish life and the fish business and is considered an authority upon all matters relating to fish production and marketing.

It Came to Pass That—

—By Dr. Cecil Roth, of London, England, fellow of the Royal Historical Society.

JUNE 7TH.

Execution of Rodrigo Lopez, 1594. A Portuguese Marrano, who had left his native country through fear of the Inquisition, he had settled in London, where he exercised the profession of medicine. The ill-fated Earl of Essex extended him his patronage; and he became body-physician to Queen Elizabeth herself. He was subsequently closely connected with Don Antonio, the pretender to the Portuguese throne, during his stay in London. This proved his undoing. A quarrel with Essex turned the most powerful noble in England against him; and the discovery that he was implicated in a plot in the Spanish interest against the pretender was exaggerated into an allegation that he was conspiring against the life of the Queen herself. Lopez' fate was sealed after a partisan trial, presided over by Essex in person; and, on June 7th., 1594, he was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn Tree. The commotion caused by this trial, which brought a Jew before the public eye in England for the first time for three centuries, is thought to have suggested to Shakespeare the idea of his Shylock.

JUNE 8TH.

Act of Confederation adopted by the German states, 1815. At the Congress of Vienna, of which this had been one of the major preoccupations, the case of the Jews had been formally represented, for the first time in diplomatic history. Their proposal that they should continue in the enjoyment of all those ample rights granted to them during the period of the French supremacy, which had just come to an end, obtained powerful support. Hardenberg, the Prussian plenipotentiary, was wholehearted in their favour; but the representatives of Bavaria, Saxony, and the Free Cities set themselves in opposition. At last, a clause was inserted in Article xvi of the 'Bundesakte' to the effect that the Jews should continue to enjoy the privileges accorded them in the various states. At the last moment, however, the word 'by' was substituted for 'in'. Thus the whole importance of the clause was nullified, since it was easy for the signatories to plead that the emancipation effected under the French influence had not been granted 'by' the states themselves. The way was thus laid open for the subsequent reaction.

JUNE 9TH.

Death of 'Rabbenu Tam', 1171. Rashi, the greatest scholar of his generation, had the unusual good fortune to transmit a considerable degree of his intellectual pre-eminence to his descendants. His daughter Jochbed, who married Meir ben Samuel of Ramerupt (near Troyes), had three sons, all of whom became famous as scholars. The most eminent of them was the youngest, Jacob (born 1100), called by the sobriquet of 'Tam' ('the simple')—the epithet applied to the Patriarch of the same name—owing to his sanctity of character. He became known as the greatest Rabbinical authority of his age, and leader of the Tosafot, or 'Supplementers' who carried on Rashi's work. His opinion was sought by scholars from as far off as Italy, Spain, and even England. He was interested, too, in humanistic studies. But his wider vision was shown in his convening at Troyes in about 1150 and again about ten years later (on the first occasion, in conjunction with his brother Samuel) of Rabbinical synods to cope with the fresh conditions which had arisen in consequence of the Second Crusade. In these, which were perhaps the most representative which have taken place until our own days, the Rabbis of Germany as well as of France co-operated. In 1147, in the course of an attack made upon the community of Ramerupt on the second of Pentecost, Rabbenu Tam nearly lost his life, but he was rescued by a friendly knight. His last public act was to decree a general fast mourning for the martyrs of Blois of May 26th., 1171. A fortnight after that event he died.

Where Are the COLD WATER BATHERS You Hear About?

HAVE you heard rumors of a tribe of supermen who are never quite happy unless their tough bodies are exposed to the chilling deluge of an icy shower?

But have you seen one of these superior beings? You've read about them—quite true, for they largely exist in the pages of "red-blooded, he-man" fiction.

But after all, hot water bathing is much more sensible. It's cleansing; it's a stimulant or a sedative, as you wish... and above all, it's enjoyable. Cold water is at its best when used sparingly—a dash perhaps to close your pores after a hot or warm bath.

Gas-heated water is modern. It's easy. Turn the faucet and hot water's ready... enough for your bath and plenty left over for a massage, shave or shampoo. Enough, too, to smooth the tasks of dishwashing, mopping and cleaning.

Why do without it? The new RUID-AUTOHOT is here now, waiting you to see it and learn about the special terms that make ownership easy.

Riding abreast of the times

You expect more from your motor car today than you did ten years ago. And you get it. Greater speed, smoother power and more responsive performance are common to modern cars as a result of the development of higher speed, higher compression motors.

These improved engines demand a better oil—fuller-bodied, with greater resistance to heat and wear.

To ensure a better motor oil, Imperial Oil Limited goes all the way to Peru for the crude from which to make Marvelube.

Marvelube is made from a base that is rich in all the qualities necessary for better lubrication of the modern motor. It is today the oil standard for high-speed motors from coast to coast.

Marvelube is preferred by over half a million motorists in Canada and is the choice of aircraft operators because of its superior lubricating qualities.

There is a grade of Marvelube refined to meet exactly the specifications of your car, truck or tractor. Consult the Marvelube Chart at Imperial Oil stations and dealers.

WOULD YOU MARRY AN ACCENT?

By Nedda Joseph

"But he has an accent!" A familiar verdict this is, and what horror is buried in the pronouncement! You see, Bertha has just announced her engagement, and everyone is both surprised and pleased. That plain, simple, sadly-neglected-by-a young woman should find someone to marry her seems quite extraordinary. The joy of her relatives is equalled only by the incredulous amazement of her truest girl friend. Rumor has it that he is neither halt nor blind, nor bald, nor toothless, nor ugly, nor poor, nor senile, nor widowed. None of the shortcomings suspected of a man who accepts a homely, unaccomplished bride is his. Really, it seems another miracle, until someone mentions the "accent." That simple statement is a revelation. So, that's the rub—and a serious one it is in Bertha's circle, almost as grave as a glass eye, a wooden leg or big toe.

Bertha belongs to a well-to-do, well-dressed, smug and consecrated set that lives in the Upper West Side. Her friends have lovely names like Gloria and Joan and Sybil. They support the Hadassah and the Junior League of their temple, where even the orthodox minister is American, in speech, dress and behavior. They like themselves, their friends and their neighborhood none of which is too "offensively" Jewish. The shock of these good people on the question of Bertha is, we can realize, deep. Their joy at her good fortune evaporates quickly. Heavy sighs are breathed at poor Bertha's fate: a man with an accent.

You meet the accent kind in the Catskills, in Coney Island, at Atlantic City, even at some of the clubs. They are easier to become acquainted with than the more fashionable young American fellows, who are spoiled by the overwhelming and for them, are rather elusive. The queer thing about these men with foreign accents is that nothing can really be said against them, except that some of them are a bit too seriously—this serious talk they call philosophy. For the most part they are generous, neatly dressed and well behaved. But how can an American girl bring home a boy like that who speaks like her father's uncle? It would be humiliating.

That is why you generally freeze up when a gentleman to whom you happen to be introduced greets you with a hearty "gled to mitt you". You take your cue from the opening lines and play the cold-shouldered duchess role, a part that you have mastered from long practice.

The accent complex constitutes one of the most virulent forms of snobbery raging among young Jews in this country. The female of the species is the more morbidly addicted to it. Girls who can be taught to overlook poverty, to forget ugliness, to condone moral waywardness in prospective husbands and who, in their eagerness for nuptial blessedness, undertake cheerfully to reform and improve an erring swain, become rigidly indifferent when confronted by an accent.

The most heartless snobs are those who have been much snubbed, and the Jews, long subjected to prejudice, can be relentless when they land an object for their contempt. It is a pity but none the less characteristic, that the more frequent victims of a Jew's scorn are fellow-Jews. In America, there are repeated instances of antipathy among groups of Jews: the early Sephardic settlers, elegant and established, showed little amity toward the later arriving German Jews, who, in turn, proud of their alleged culture and wealth, kept aloof from the uncouth Russian Jews, whose arrival at Ellis Island followed their own by several decades. The average immigrant Jew promptly falls for the American pattern of living, and chews gum and shouts "shut up" and worships Texas Guinan before he has learned to say "good morning". As he becomes more deeply immersed in Americanism, his contempt grows for brethren clumsy or retarded in Americanistic development. He is irritated and flees from the presence of a kinsman with a more or less Cyrano nose or over-animated conversational hands or whose inflections are too reminiscent of cheder vocalizations.

In the face of this existent general prejudice, the Jewish belle's particular aversion to the foreign suitor may be explained as motivated by tschule, the guiding star of a would-be bride's behavior. Marriage for the Jewish girl is often a political measure, an opportunity to improve her status, financially, socially or culturally by association. The young American professional is the ideal of the average Jewish girl. A doctor, a lawyer, a dentist, or even a druggist is held a suitable consort, insuring, as he does, a more or less substantial income, a nice home, a set of acquaintances among brother-professionals and an impressive amount of culture—witness the college diplomas hanging over the set of the Harvard Classics in the offices of said medicos, attorneys-at-law, apothecaries and painless extractors.

To be sure, there are among men with foreign accents some who offer, if not these combined advantages, at least the best feature of one or another of them. There are the professionals and there are some really wealthy business men. But the Jewish girl is not only practical; she is also romantic. Soaring on the wings of a high-school education, she cannot reconcile butchered English with the hero destined to share her life. Prince Charming must speak perfect English, or at least as good as that of the boys in the street. The young woman cannot rid herself of an inbred contempt for someone who mutilates his a's and e's and e's and v's and w's, for whom "vine, vamin end sung iz a vickness." Between her and the perpetrator of these linguistic crimes there is a fatal incompatibility that prevents intimacy. At best the man can be just tolerated, patronized. Our prosperous immigrant manufacturer, who has dreamt of a bride from the golden West Side is doomed to turn his attention sadly toward the East Side, where ambitious landmeidlach and robust Yiddish chorines from Second Avenue forgive his gutturals as they enjoy his gold.

However, the man with the accent need not despair. Conditions already seem to promise a brighter future. Just as there has been a change within the past decade in American architecture transportation and ways of getting rich, so has there been in this period a change in the foreigner's status. The Russian intelligentsia is partly responsible. Erstwhile European students, artists and intellectuals, after surveying the American scene, they have had the sense and the courage to turn the tables on the American-Jewish mix who would snub them. They tell her bluntly that while her phonetic are admirable, hers is really a wasted talent, for she has nothing worth while upon which to exercise her excellent pronunciation. So, while the American girl considers these "Bolsheviks" merely uncouth and ill-mannered, they on their side entertain a lively contempt for her and find her intolerable. These foreigners, down to and other type of American, who by education and interests sin their rounds of going they meet America, who to young man for a cation and clear ideas she cannot p ference are forgone men delight of and conductors, so much better whose names so rected by the f than by the Am on. find her intolerable for what they deem her materialism and stupidity.

These foreigners are, though, drawn to and encouraged by another type of American-Jewish girl, who by education has acquired tastes and interests similar to theirs. In their rounds of concert or lecture going they meet this other Miss America, who turns to the foreign young man for an enhanced appreciation and clearer interpretation of ideas she cannot grasp. Phonetic differences are forgotten in the common delight of music, composers and conductors, whose rhythms are so much better understood and whose names so much more glibly recited by the foreign young man than by the American young woman. The melting spot in America is the red carpet in the upper regions of Carnegie Hall, where are seated nightly during the season the impecunious enthusiasts who come to stand for sold-out symphony concerts. There are Germans and Russians and Serbs and Swedes, Frenchmen and Hindus and everywhere young Jews, sprawled on the floor, by leave of the genial Irish watchman, in various bemused attitudes. Accents abound here—all shades of them—as does perfect Bostonian English, but no superiority or contempt is manifested on that account. Under the spell of Toscanini's baton, nothing but harmony can exist. Music is the charm and not "American"—and a spirit of bohemian camaraderie is the accepted note. The stigma of "greenhorn" is ruled out. Sympathy and mutual response to beauty, which can be expressed in any intonation, become the only gauge of friendship and regard.

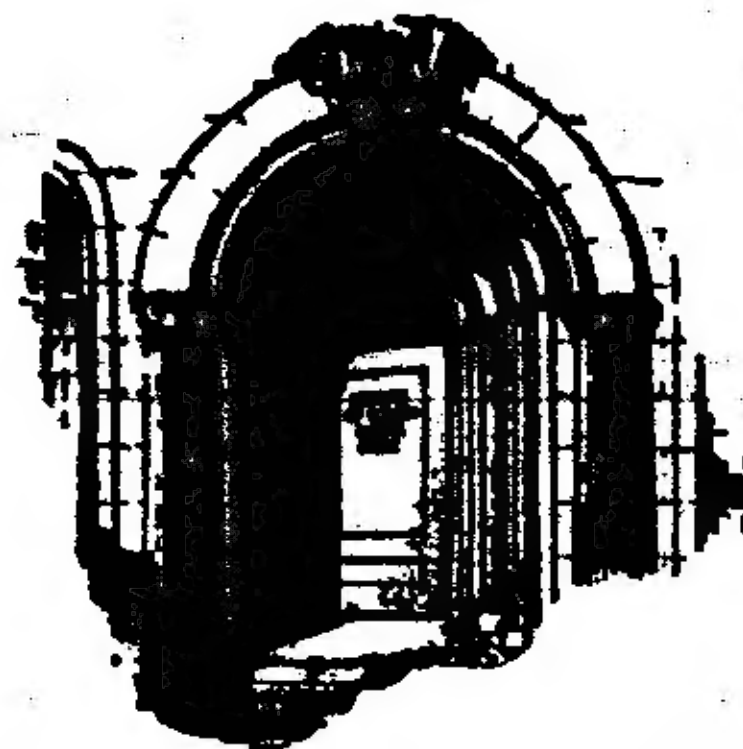

The ranks of the intelligentsia have been augmented by the new type of immigrant arriving since the enforcement of post-war immigration restrictions. There are fewer of the naive, open-eyed, wondering, humble, pack-and-child-laden workmen, headed for factories and toil, ignorance and poverty. There are more of the intellectual Jews arriving, not only from Russia and Poland, but from England, France, Germany, Austria and Hungary. They come to travel, to study, to teach, to lecture, to exhibit, to speculate—in short, to behave as artists and white-collar men. They bring accents, but of a new quality. Their language is fairly correct and pleasant; their hesitance adds charm and distinction to their speech.

They do not come, as did their predecessors, intent on forgetting the life left behind, immersing its darkness in the golden promise of America. They are sceptical about America and rather proud of their life in past, which they bring along to enrich their American future. The new foreigner is resurrecting Europe here—instead of burying it. He bows to the superiority of American plumbing and moving pictures, but he criticizes other Americanisms—its tabloids, its loudness, its harshness, its restlessness, its lack of poise, its insensitiveness to beauty.

The new arrival is rarely a "greenhorn" to be reserved for homely Berthas. He attains the limelight and genuine appreciation among discriminating young American women. When the new foreigner is fully recognized he will be a dangerous rival to the typical American young man whose greatest achievement nowadays seems to be paying night-club checks. Unless he learns from the European example and acquires some additional graces, the standard American man will lose some of his popularity.

For Jewish girls in this country are rapidly developing a new form of snobbery—intellectual snobbery. They are being educated past the limits of Wadleigh High School, allowed to travel beyond the pale of North White Lake. Their horizons have widened far beyond the usual sphere of smug collegians concerned with frat dances and the quest of imitation Greta Garbos upon whom to confer their ardor and their frat pins. Girls nowadays themselves in possession of a well-earned B.A. or M.A. or even a neat Ph.D. realize that collegiateness is not akin to cleverness and do not worship at the shrine of the raccoon coat so zealously as heretofore. The young Jewish school teacher returns from a summer in Paris-Rome-Cairo requiring more stimulating society than the tired business man or the tireless golfer, albeit they are Yale alumni and football fans.

She has discovered in her travels that with the European she can really talk and talk, not about clothes and traffic and the latest revue but about Fascism, the charm of the Lido, the colors of Cezanne, the curves of da Vinci, the realism of Rospigli, the pathos of Chekhov and the humanity of Sierra, the probing of Dostoyevsky and the glittering insinuations of Aldous Huxley. On questions such as these the young man whom she encounters in New York with only his "first papers" seems more responsive, more informative than the average bright young American. The foreign accent is beginning to be an index to a rich, mature, fertile personality. Unusual charms are being expected from its possessor—gallantry, sophistication, good taste. The accent unconsciously is accepted as one of the charms and the time seems not far off when to be really smart one will have to wield a delicate accent. Our thinning crops of foreigners will soon be at a premium in the realms of society and matrimony. (Jewish Forward.)

settlement of the Jews in the Free Ports of Pisa and of Leghorn. Of these, the latter (which had hitherto been little more than a fishing village) soon outgrew its ancient neighbour. The charter of the new settlement was to be found in the Concession of Ferdinand II of June 10th., 1593. This, though addressed generally to all merchants, of whatever race or religion, was intended more especially for the benefit of the Jews, and became known to them by the affectionate title of La Livornia. The sixth clause specifically guaranteed protection and immunity for any who had hitherto been living as Christians, thus serving as a direct invitation for the Marranos of Spain and Portugal. This opportunity was eagerly accepted, with the result that Leghorn became with Amsterdam, Hamburg, and London, one of the main centres of settlement for the refugees from the fires of the Inquisition. The community grew apace, becoming before long one of the most important in Italy from the numerical point of view. Its flourishing schools earned it the title of 'The Little Jerusalem'; and its printing presses became famous throughout the world of Hebrew scholarship. Moreover, it was one of the few places in Italy where the Ghetto system was never introduced—in conformity with the original provisions of La Livornia. It was only late in the nineteenth century, with the growth of the ports of Genoa and Naples, that the community of Leghorn lost its importance.

JUNE 11TH.

Fire at Posen, 1590. The Jewish quarter of the town was built almost entirely of wood. When, therefore, on Monday, two days after the Pentecost of 5350, an outbreak occurred in it, it was foredoomed to destruction. The hostility of the general population, who usually took advantage of any similar juncture to indulge in pillage, discouraged the majority of the Jews, who sought refuge in flight; the efforts of the minority were nullified by the breaking of the bucket-chain of the well from which they were drawing water. As a result, the whole of the Jewish quarter was reduced to ashes, not a single house being left; while fifteen persons, with no less than eighty scrolls of the Law, fell victims to the flames. This disaster was commemorated in Hebrew elegies by the local poets.

JUNE 12TH.

Disputation at Paris, 1240. This was the first of the series of religious controversies staged during the middle ages before various princes and potentates, usually at the incitement of converted Jews. They had no other real object than the vilification of Judaism, since the truth of Christianity was taken as being beyond all question, and any fair debating reply would immediately be condemned as blasphemous. In the present case, the leader of the attack was Nicholas Donin, of La Rochelle, a recent apostate from Judaism. He had previously laid before Pope Gregory IX a formal denunciation of the Talmud as blasphemous and pernicious, in consequence of which there had been a general seizure of Hebrew literature on the previous March 3rd. The merits of the case were now disputed in Latin at the royal court by order of Louis IX. The cause of the Jews was represented by four Rabbis, including Jehiel of Paris and Moses of Coucy (author of the Major Book of Precepts). After the merest parody of an enquiry, in which all freedom of speech on the unpopular side was rigorously suppressed, Donin was adjudged to have proved his case. A short time afterwards twenty-four cartloads of Hebrew books were committed to the flames in Paris.

Bull Exhiba nobis of Boniface VIII, 1299. In this the Pope (picked out for execration by Dante) declared that the Jews were to be considered amongst the 'powerful persons' who might be denounced to the Inquisition without the accuser's name being made known. The martyrdom, on July 1st., of the same year, of Elijah de' Pomis, one of the leading members of the community, was no doubt in direct consequence of this. To save his co-religionists, he pleaded guilty to all of the charges brought against him, and was put to the ordeal by fire and water. In the first of these he perished. His guilt was accordingly assumed, and all his property was confiscated. Two anonymous elegies were composed in celebration of his heroic death.

Justice Brandeis, of the United States Supreme Court, was one of three dissenting justices when the vote was taken refusing Rosika Schwimmer, Hungarian pacifist leader, the rights of American citizenship. The majority opinion said of her "The fact that she is an uncompromising pacifist, with no sense of nationalism but only a cosmic sense of belonging to the human family justifies belief that she may be opposed to the use of military force as contemplated by our Constitution and laws. And one who is without any sense of nationalism is not well bound or held by ties of affection to any nation of government." The minority opinion, written by Justice Holmes, said in part: "If there is any principle of the Constitution that more imperatively calls for attachment than any other it is the principle of free thought, not free thought for those who agree with us, but freedom for the thought that we hate." The majority opinion is quite naturally reactionary since the United States is reactionary. It has no use for prospective citizen material which says it will not take up arms for the Christian United States. An uncompromising pacifist is a menace and it is poor recommendation to have only a cosmic sense of belonging to the human family. But consider the minority opinion, the dissenting voice! It is the clear voice of justice, righteousness, tolerance. It must be inspiring to the Jewish people that Justice Brandeis always leads or concurs on the side of liberality whenever the United States Supreme Court hands down a decision.

In this country a Jew could be received warmly into the Christian faith merely by proclaiming his intention of wanting to come to Christ and be saved. It would require nothing more than that to assure the Christian converts that they had acquired a Gospel addict. If the Jewish candidate had any ulterior motive for his act it would be hard to make the converts believe it so great would be their exultation over making him see the light. But in Hungary the attitude of the custodians of Gospel is quite different. Converts and assimilators are no novelty. Worse than that they have become a nuisance en masse. In order to raise their economic and social status they are more than pleased to forfeit their heritage and enter the Protestant church. Thus at a recent convention of Protestant churches it was charged that the growing number of converts is due not to conviction, alas, but unworthy ambitions, alas. Realization of this state was painful enough to the churches to force them to take steps. They decided that in the future a Jew may not declare in private that he has been won over to Christianity. He may embrace it in public only and that in the presence of the entire congregation and amid proper ceremonies. Hungary is very anti-Semitic and the churches feel that between allowing a Jew to better his status and increasing the number of converts perhaps it would be better in the long run if the Jew remained where he is without any improvement at all.

A survey commission is in the Crimea investigating a new area for Jewish colonization on behalf of the Agrojoint (the agency of the American Distribution Committee) and the Comzet (Soviet government Department for settling Jews on the land) and if their report is favorable 40,000 families can be settled in the district of Sivash on the Azov Sea. Colonization in this district would be part of the Agrojoint program mapped out for the next ten years. The land here is so swampy as to necessitate drainage at great expense all to be paid for by the Soviet government. The projected work would include the construction of a water reservoir for irrigation so that the Jewish farmers would be independent of weather conditions.

The detractors in this country of Jewish colonization in Russia can not sneer so energetically at this new project of the Agrojoint and the Comzet as they sneered several years ago at settling Jews on the land. At that time many American Jews claimed that the declassed urban Jews of Russia could never be farmers. They said that the Russian peasants would be so incensed at giving to the hated Jews rich land which they felt belonged to themselves that pogroms and slaughter would be bound to ensue. They argued that it was foolish and dangerous to settle the Jews on the soil with no stronger guarantee than the flimsy goodwill of the Soviet Government.

These arguments have not held water. To save their skins the economists raised Jews have become real farmers. Far from annihilating their Jewish neighbors the Russian peasants have often been helpful, not only giving advice to maintain their hostility. The Soviet government seems even too well established for some Americans and is assisting Jew-

Canadian Jewish Review.

I read with interest the commentaries of my spiritual guide and mentor (sometimes tormentor) regarding the City politician addressing Jewish organizations. My personal experience of over twenty years of obtaining speakers has been never to invite politicians to address a Jewish organization that was not a political one and only once did I invite a politician to address an audience. He was a mere senator and on the wrong side of politics, and he spoke on a subject he was an authority on, viz. railroads.

It is to be regretted that there are some so called influential Jews who are always anxious to become chairman of the speakers committee in order to show their political friends what political "pull" they have, by inviting politicians to address their Jewish organizations.

two-by-four lawyer who knows nothing about things Jewish and obtains all data and information. This trash is then handed out to an intelligent Jewish audience and the chairman is quite pleased with himself. Next day he tells the politician that at the next election he has another 500 Jewish votes for him. People should select a speaker who is an authority on some subject and let him talk about it. We want to hear his message and nothing more. It has been the means of inviting all sorts of men, Jew and Goy, not one of them have been to me persons of political advantage. My suggestion to all Jewish organizations that are not political is that they refuse to invite or even listen to politicians as it makes us the laughing stock of the community and whatever respect the Goy may have for us is thus easily lost.

Do You Live Well?

Assuredly not unless the choice foods you buy for the table are kept at their best in a well-iced refrigerator. Above 50° milk is unsafe; meat loses its appetizing flavor; eggs and butter deteriorate. Why run such risks when ice costs so little? A few cents a day keeps the refrigerator full and your food in prime condition.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the best agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming, and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honorable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regard to acquiring a title to their rich agricultural lands are also given.

LYRIC MUSICAL COMEDY COMPANY TO PLAY "SUNNY" FOR SECOND OFFERING

With all ranks filled, rehearsals in full blast, and the complete production material of the original show available for use here, the ever-popular Lyric Musical Comedy Company at the Victoria Theatre on Monday June 10th, present for their second offering Charles B. Dillingham's greatest Broadway musical hit "Sunny".

"Sunny" has a most interesting story. It concerns a dainty little equestrienne of a high-class English circus who has made up her mind that she must go to the United States, and who, as a stowaway, has been told that she will be detained at Ellis Island and sent back because of the immigration regulations. Sunny is very much in love with Tom, and he with her, so when Tom's sister suggests that the best way out of the predicament is for Sunny and Jim to get married as a matter of form, though Jim is engaged to another. The idea is for the couple to secure a divorce after they have got through Ellis Island.

In the second act we find Jim and Sunny diverting themselves with gymnastic exercises, fox-hunting, and song and dance, while they await the issue of the divorce proceedings. Then the man who loves Sunny and hates Jim brings the latter's fiancée, Winnie, on the scene to make trouble. And trouble certainly comes. The delays of the law complicate matters further, and in order to save the audience from being too depressed, a series of remarkable dancing features are introduced, with the double object of amusing both Sunny and Jim and those who are watching them in the auditorium.

Eventually matters are straightened out, and the result is that all the various couples get themselves into order, to the accompaniment of much song, dance and hilarious frolic, and a grand finale in a big, big room which affords ample opportunity for everybody in the cast to do overalls and do it well. The principals of the Lyric Musical Comedy Company will find trouble and plenty to do, and the audience will have a grand chance of judging the merit and capacity of the new organization from the very outset.

Maxwell M. Payne
Managing Director of the Automobile Owners' Association and the Central Ontario Bus Lines

The story of a man who set out to accomplish something and succeeded in his quest is that of Maxwell M. Payne. He started life the seventh child in a family of eleven, and whether it was the combination of lucky numbers or the natural gypsy that set him wandering off to find his niche in the world, he has never quite decided. Whatever it was, New York, his birthplace, was not large enough to give him the experience of the world that was to fit him for his destined work.

In Montreal he became an official with a large concern and there it was that he learned a truth that every great leader learns, whether he be soldier or civilian that no man can command who has not first learned to obey. He gathered experience here that taught him to form judgements any to grasp problems with decisiveness. Handling men bred in him the ability to read and understand men, to deal with them with a sympathy and directness, and to gather around him those whose qualities fit them for their especial job.

During this time the lure of the automobile caught Mr. Payne and the future in that direction opened up to him its possibilities. Back in his mind there worked a scheme and with his determination and ability to carry out his idea but with very little else he came to Toronto. Here he established the A.O.A. and the confidence of a few men gave him the nucleus to work upon that has grown into a membership of thousands. The same belief in his powers organization and working capacity led to his being offered by a group of prominent financiers the position of Managing Director of the Central Ontario Bus Lines. The trust was indeed justified, for when Mr. Payne took over the line in the month of June, 1923 the Bus line was in insolvent position. At his hands began to show a profit. He introduced new ideas, improved methods of operation and other drastic changes. Purchased new equipment. By the middle of January in the following year, during the worst month of the operation, earnings more than covered operating cost, which is an enviable record for any transportation concern.

Personally, Mr. Payne is a man blessed with that all too rare quality, a keen sense of humour, a happy faculty of forming friendships that last.
